The finality of the Office Action mailed 15 December 2005 is WITHDRAWN in view of the newly cited grounds of rejection herein.

35 U.S.C. 101 reads as follows:

Whoever invents or discovers any new and useful process, machine, manufacture, or composition of matter, or any new and useful improvement thereof, may obtain a patent therefor, subject to the conditions and requirements of this title.

Claims 19-25, 38-41, 43-65 and 78-85 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 101 because the claimed invention lacks patentable utility.

The instant claims are drawn broadly to a method of expressing the recited protein in a cell and then detecting the expression of said protein from said cell. However, it is not apparent from the specification what purpose is served by this detection, i.e., what useful outcome is produced by possessing the expression data thus generated. Since any gene might be expressed in a cell and then have its expression detected, the instant invention lacks a specific utility. Furthermore, since the data thus acquired does not appear to lead to any useful outcome, the invention also lacks a substantial utility. The specification mentions, e.g., at paragraph [0006], that “[e]mbodiments of the invention include fusion proteins that can be used for quantitating gene transfer both in vitro and in vivo.” However, measuring the capability of a particular gene to be transfected into a cell or patient merely measures a characteristic of the gene itself, with no further reference to a utility for that gene being transfected.

The following is a quotation of the second paragraph of 35 U.S.C. 112:

The specification shall conclude with one or more claims particularly pointing out and distinctly claiming the subject matter which the applicant regards as his invention.

Claims 40 and 46 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 112, second paragraph, as being indefinite for failing to particularly point out and distinctly claim the subject matter which applicant regards as the invention.

Each of the instant claims employs incorrect Markush-type language, i.e., “or” as the conjunction between the elements of the Markush-type group. A group which consists of one element or another element is indefinite. The conjunction “and” should be employed in place of “or”.
